All Ready For Big Stampede Here July 1st

P.M. Afternoon Program 1st
Now Assured

Members of the stampede executive have been busy during the past few weeks in making arrangements to the grounds and outlining plans for the annual stampede to be held here on Dominion Day, July 1st.

Arrangements have been made for supplying the bar with beer, and also for the sale of tickets, and indications are that there will be a number of good times present.

A good program of track events for horse races and novelty stunts has been arranged, besides athletic events and races for all ages of school children.

There will be a full afternoon program with the stampede in attendance, and a big dance in the evening.

New Homestead Area In Guard District

Can Be Piled On In The Near Future

Arrangements have been completed by the Government for the throwing open for homestead entry at an early date of a tract comprising four townships in the Crossed district, according to Hon. Hugh W. Allen, Minister of Lands and Mines. The date on which homesteads can be filed is not yet set, but it is expected it will be in the near future. This area, pointed out by the Minister, was cleared and set aside as a likely settlement area for one family moving from the dried out areas of the south. However, the area did not attract many and as the land is considered good for settlement, it will be thrown open in this regular way. The Minister said that all arrangements in connection with the action had been made and that it was expected all land would be snapped up immediately it is available.

Child Star's New Picture A Romance

Shirley Temple Co-Stars With
Lionel Barrymore

The movie news of the day is that America's golden-haired sweetheart arrives in her latest picture Shirley Temple, the seven-year-old screen miracle who was unknown less than a year ago, and who now co-stars with Lionel Barrymore in "The Little Colonel," which begins a three-day engagement at the Monarch theatre today. Her innocent romp through the land of make-believe of the bright fairy tales of modern days.

Her film combat all the available film and present for a suitable vehicle for Shirley and found it in one of the "Little Colonel" stories.

Drama and comedy, pathos and humor, vie for supremacy in this play.

Mr. L. E. Johnson Passed Away Tuesday

Remains Taken to Colfax
Wash. For Interment

Le Van E. Johnson, who has been a resident of this town for nearly two years, passed away in Banff on Tuesday Morning of heart trouble.

Deceased who was 61 years of age, had not been in good health for the past few months and left two weeks ago for Banff in the hope that change would improve his condition.

The late Mr. Johnson was born and raised in the State of Washington and came to this district several years ago and arrived about ten miles west of town. Two years ago he retired and purchased a home in Redcliff where he has resided ever since.

Van, as he was familiarly known, was a quiet, kind hearted gentleman, who always had a good word to say for everybody he knew. Besides his widow deceased leaves three others and one sister, all of whom were in Banff when he passed away.

The remains were taken to a local home at Colfax, Wash., for interment in the family cemetery.

The sympathy of the community goes out to Mrs. Johnson her bereavement.

Building of Dams Waiting for Engineers

Many Applications Coming
From All Quarters

Ranchers and farmers from three prairie provinces were made applications to the water development authorities have been asked by the committee in charge at Medicine Hat to be patient for the next few days. Several letters have been received complaining that nothing has been done after their applications had been accepted and these senders were of the opinion that they were neglected.

Such is not the case, as the commission is awaiting the appointment of engineers and the surveys will be made as soon as possible after these appointments are made.

Private applications from the province of Alberta alone number more than 100 while concurrently schemes benefiting ranchers number 20 to date.

Those wishing to take advantage of this scheme should send their applications to the central office at Medicine Hat at once.

COST 56 1/2 CENTS TO GROW BUSHEL OF WHEAT

This Was Result of Tests at Experimental Farm

Wheat costs 56 1/2¢ a bushel to produce on 17 Illustration Farms in Manitoba and eastern Saskatchewan. The average yield was 18 1/2 bushels per acre. Complete records of the cost of producing were kept by the London Experimental Farm. Items charged included 16 cents for land, machinery, horse and man labor, seed, twine, thrashing and other costs.

The other strikers are to remain at Regina at the government's expense until the delegation reports back.

Canadian Trade Is Rapidly Increasing

New Stands Second in Both
Exports and Imports

In each month but one since May 1933 Canadian exports have exceeded the exports of the corresponding month of the preceding year. This culminated in the increase has reached large proportions. For the calendar year 1934 as compared with 1933 Canada made greater gains in exports than any country except British Malaya, and the gain in Canadian imports has surpassed only by British South Africa.

Sales to the British Empire increased by $119 million and sales to the United States by $100 million. This recovery in foreign trade has been a major influence in the steady improvement in the country's economic position. The success which has crowned the Ottawa agreement to foster trade within the Empire is remarkable in view of the natural limitations upon the volume of goods which can be advantageously exchanged.

Miss Selhorn, of the high school staff, will be the hostess at a formal tea at her home on Saturday afternoon, in honor of the 1935 graduating class of the high school.

This Week at Ottawa

Ottawa, June 14th 1935

The Western members' faith that they have at least convinced the powers at Ottawa that the primary producers have certain real claims. The Eastern industrial concerns have had a very great advantage in the protection of the tariffs. The West should have some compensatory advantage and we hope that the Grain Board will make it as rapidly as possible the 220 million bushels now held. The Board will have power to deal with all grains and will operate from coast to coast.

The new President of the American Medical Association believes that a race of supermen can be developed by proper dieting. He noted that children who are growing up in America are taller and stronger than were their parents who grew up in Central Europe. Proper food should bring a greater physical development, greater longevity and a higher level of cultural attainment. The advance in Medical Science has increased the average length of life from 42 to about 53 years. If the social assistance was forthcoming so that all could enjoy an ample supply of the quality of food necessary for proper nutrition, the race might attain great mental and physical improvement.

The legislation based on the Report of the Price Spreading Committee came up this week. Mr. Stevens and many of those associated with him feel that it has hardly touched the surface and that it will not greatly change the present situation. "The work is being given to the Tariff Board and Mr. Stevens claims that they have not the time to properly carry out their work. There is also a feeling among the members that the move toward doing away with competition and a guiding monopoly by Government supervision has its dangers and pitfalls.

The objection to monopoly is two-fold, having the whole market to themselves they charge their own prices, dictate their own terms and become as arrogant as you please. The second objection is that a monopoly becomes extravagant and inefficient. No Act of Parliament can provide against this second objection. All we can do is to regulate monopolies as regards their dealings with the public. We may say to a monopoly, "You must pay certain wages; You must work certain hours and you must charge certain prices." We might do all that but no commission will ever be set up competent to go into the facts and determine whether or no the factory is run efficiently. Extravagance and inefficiency will grow, develop and keep developing as long as the monopoly exists, and experience shows this many times. The result of a competition will force it to be efficient to a degree of omission or regulation it will never attain.

Girls Lose Tough Game to Monarch

Had Lead of Eight When
Balloon Went Up

Redcliff softball girls had a win and a loss in their season games during the past week. Their win was from the Monarch Club, played here last Saturday and it was a real win with a score of 30 to 8. In this game the girls went on a batting spree, almost every player contributing a safe hit.

Their loss to the Monarchs on Monday evening in the first inning of the toughest league ever witnessed. For the first six innings Redcliff was putting up a tight game. Inna Rish, in the box was at her best and was getting good support. The players were battling nicely and in their half of the seventh Redcliff had a lead of 13 to 5. It was in the last half of the seventh that Redcliff's halcyon wind up. A series of passes, a wild throw to bases, and a couple of home runs, ended the Monarchs a score of 8 to 13 the tally.

Whitewashes for Redcliff in the eighth and ninth and three runs for the Monarchs in the eighth won the game for the Monarchs by 17 to 14. It surely was a tough finish for Redcliff, but they'll do better next time they meet the Monarchs.

Our Girls play the New Club on Monday in Medicine Hat.

Local Football Team Lose To Taber

By Score of 1-0 in The Game
Last Evening

Taber football team defeated Redcliff here last evening by a score of 1 to 0. Despite the high wind and cold weather both teams put up a fairly good exhibition. With the wind in their favor in the first half the visitors had slightly the advantage of height, although Redcliff made a series of attacks but were unable to locate the net. No goals were scored in this period.

In the second half Redcliff started off with a rush and it looked as though they were going to break the monotony but when it came to putting on the finishing touches they were not there with the goods. The changes made in the local line up for this period did not improve their play but rather weakened it. When about half way through this period the visitors took control and after a nice work-up Van Norman scored. This was the only tally of the game.

Owing to the heavy growth of grass, the field was in bad shape, making accuracy in passing impossible and considerably spoiling the game. The wonder was that the officials of the local team did not see it that the grass was cut.

After the game an impromptu dance was held in CHS Hall for the entertainment of the visitors. There was a fair attendance and a pleasant evening was spent.

"Lest We Forget" Coming To Monarch

Plans have been completed for a three day showing in Medicine Hat of the Monarch theatre next Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday of the distinguished Canadian war film "Lest We Forget," brought to the city under the auspices of the Canadian Legion.

The picture compiled from authentic war films of the Canadian government, interpolated with re-enacted incidents that gave the whole into a compelling narrative, shows actual Canadian troops in action as has been hailed from coast to coast as a motion picture that strips away of its false glamor, revealing it in its true light.

The picture, according to one Ontario newspaper, is one that should be seen by every Canadian—English as well as French, immigrant as well as native-born, old as well as young.

Leaders And Critics

In the face of enormous difficulties, which are the direct outcome of the Great War and the aftermath of depression following that terrible struggle, as more or less similar conditions have followed every great war in history, resolute leaders of men in all nations are striving mightily to bring order out of disorder and start the world on the road of progress and prosperity. Men are breaking down the burdens of responsibility which they are carrying, and they are wasting themselves out mentally and physically in the effort to serve their fellow countrymen and the world.

In his almost superhuman struggle to maintain peace in Europe, and in his untiring efforts to promote disarmament, Ramsay MacDonald has become a much older man than his years. Reports that he must relinquish the premiership are now rare.

In Canada, Hon. R. B. Bennett has for five years devoted his every waking moment to the duties and responsibilities of government. People may criticize his policies and his methods, they may say he should have divided responsibility to a far greater extent with his cabinet colleagues instead of shouldering so much of the burden himself. But no one can say that as Prime Minister he has not given himself wholeheartedly and energetically to the discharge and responsibilities placed in his hands for the care of his country. As a result his task has been a very heavy one, may have to retire, and he has unquestionably considerably shortened his life.

President Roosevelt has been beyond his years for many years of his life, the same can be said of the leaders of other nations, and it is true of men not only in the Federal arena in Canada but in the provinces and in municipal affairs. The strain is terrific, and men everywhere are paying the price. Yet they carry on because it is their duty to do so, and because they are sincerely desirous of rendering service to their country and fellowmen.

Probably because the great mass of people have difficulties and worries of their own to contend against, and few of them give thought and little consideration to the manifold and gigantic problems which leaders in government everywhere are endeavoring to solve. Rather, men in public life are the targets for all kinds of mistakes of abuse and criticism, and their critics are made much more difficult by the carping complaints of men of lesser caliber and by demagogues and agitators who take advantage of the prevailing situation to stir up the unlikeliest passions for their own selfish and sinister motives and designs.

Recently in a little known publication there appeared one of the type of articles which make a sane man wonder. The writer there urged people to read history. He declared that in every great crisis hereafter, and everywhere, a man had to lead the way out, and he cited that "Moses, Christ, Pyre, Abraham Lincoln, and men like leaders behind them did new things, utterly regardless of what had been done before." He then added that at Ottawa two years ago, meaning Mr. Bennett and Mr. King, are falling while the economic capital burns. Surely, he says, after five years of labor Canada should at last bring forth a man.

This writer cites Moses, a leader, and at the hands of his people turned against him, commenced the worship of false idols, a calf of gold, and paid the penalty of forty years wandering in the wilderness.

The writer speaks of the Christ. He was the world's greatest leader of all time. Yet the people of his day rejected him and demanded his death.

Abraham Lincoln was a leader, but throughout his life he was criticized and vilified, accused of being a partisan, and at the hands of his assassin.

History applauds these leaders, and their names will live forever, but in their day and generation they were despised and rejected by many, the objects of criticism and derision, and their work for humanity made difficult by the spite and hatred of other so-called leaders who played upon the ignorance, the emotions and the selfishness of the masses.

The historian of the future will probably accord to the world leaders a much more honorable place, and give credit where it is due, than the petting critics of to-day are willing or capable of according to them. The names and deeds of these leaders will be recalled long after those of their present day critics have passed into oblivion and from the memories of men.

These leaders have made mistakes. Of course they have, because they are human with all the limitations and frailties of human beings. But many of their mistakes were not of their own volition, but were forced upon them by the acts of others, either not so sincere and high minded or not with less vision and ability judged politics and followed courses of action which compelled others to step where it better grew to be mistakes but nevertheless had to be taken to avoid some possibly greater mistake and disaster.

The present is a time for patience and tolerance. It is no time for any wholly unqualified and irresponsible agitators. Constructive criticism is in order, and it is always welcomed by those entrusted with grave responsibilities. But it is a time for a swift shift to all existing critics who merely seek to destroy what others are striving to reconstruct and build up stronger and better.

A Silver Jubilee Gift

Merchants Serving Royal Family Build House For King

King George, who already owns a palace, a castle and two large estates, has received a house as a Silver Jubilee present. It is a gift of the Royal Household Association, whose members have served the royal household with groceries, furniture and everything else, and who are entitled to display the royal coat of arms over their stores.

The architect is C. Beresford Marshall, a young architect employed on known designs of thirty-six years, who up to now has been designing luxury apartments on the American shore for London.

Marshall's design is something like the American Colonial style without the pillars. It is being built at Blenheim, Surrey, about thirty miles from London, on the estate of Lord Iveagh.

There is one principal bedroom and two guest rooms, with two double rooms for maids and a chauffeur's room.

The design was chosen by the King in consultation with Sir Giles Gilbert Scott, president of the Royal Institute of British Architects.

It is not likely, however, that the King will live in the house. In such cases it is usually made a present of the life-tenancy of the house to some minor member of the royal family, or to a high court official who is retiring from his service.

HE FELT MISERABLE AFTER MEALS

Acute Indigestion Relieved By Kruschen

The treatment which put this man right was surely his worth. He suffered every case of indigestion. Read what he says:

"Three years ago I suffered very much from indigestion, loss of appetite, flatulence, and a general feeling of back. Food soured in my stomach. I felt miserable after meals, and had no desire or appetite for them. A friend advised me to try Kruschen's Little Daily Dose, and I was most happy to testify that after a short time I felt the greatest relief. I continued taking Kruschen till I felt myself quite better and a new man. I feel as light-hearted as I did three years ago."—W. R.

What Kruschen did for him it will do for everybody else who suffers from indigestion and loss of appetite. The fact is that the "Little Daily Dose" of Kruschen first stimulates the flow of gastric juices to aid digestion, and then ensures a complete, regular and satisfying elimination of all waste matter every day.

Preventing Spread Of Disease

Passengers On English Air Lines Must Have Health Certificate

Air passengers in the future will be treated like beef being examined and stamped at the port of departure. The health certificate will be issued by the health officer of the port of departure. In a conference in that city he declared that to prevent the spread of disease by air travel, the world by air travel, passengers eventually would not be permitted to travel unless they carried a clean bill of health in documentary form.

Scheme To Bring Rain

Frenchman Requires $100,000,000 To Go Ahead With Idea

Men are still seeking artificial rains and Mr. Bernard J. Dubos, of the Meteorological Society of France, is the latest to have a scheme. He would build a great and enormous dam 2,000 feet high. Through this he would force water vapor into the upper air with the thought that it would return in copious rains over a large area.

The funnel would be constructed so that it would be tapered from the broad end at the top and the whole supported by struts and pillars. It would be about 450 feet in diameter at the top and resemble a large loose cone standing on the smaller end.

The underlying idea is to have a series of wind vane at the top which will catch whatever winds there may be and start a whirl of air inside the funnel to create a vacuum. This would give a vacuum core on the principle that waterpumps have vacuum cores.

There is one detail curbing Mr. Dubos from building his core at once. He requires $100,000,000 to go ahead with the construction. It will take that much to buy the materials to build the funnel. And he is finding it hard to get anyone to gamble the $100,000,000 on the scheme that it will work and produce rain. It would take a lot of bushels of wheat, for instance, to pay the interest and principal on that much money.

Perhaps Mr. Dubos will not get anyone to take him up on his venture. But that will not matter to other scientists and inventors trying to find some way to get rain from the clouds. They are sure that there is quite likely to solve the secret, even though people may laugh at his efforts while he is experimenting.

The Four-Dollar Bill

Reason They Are Rarely Seen Is Not Generally Known

An article in the Port Arthur News-Chronicle says: "In a Cumberland street shop window a Canadian four-dollar bill has been on exhibition as a rarity. Most people know that the four-dollar bill is a rarity because so seldom seen in circulation but the reason is not so well known. When the first issue was made some twenty or thirty years ago it was found carrying a picture of the Mohican Indian, Mr. C. M. Jones, who had got hold of the wrong picture, evidently intending to put the picture of the Canadian lion on the currency, as soon as the bills began circulation the error was noticed and called to the attention of the government by residents of the Canadian Bos. Naturally, the issue with that particular picture was not continued. Hence the rarity."

Serifom Abolished

By New Decree Ethiopia Advanced In Civilization By 1,000 Years

Emperor Haile Selassie issued a decree abolishing serifom throughout Ethiopia and enjoining the system of land taxation.

An announcement had the masses acclaimed the step and added that the abolition of unequal land taxation would advance Ethiopia 1,000 years in civilization. Ethiopia for centuries was one of the most profitable centers of the African slave trade and while other countries gradually abolished the traffic, the institution remained in that country even after its admission to the League of Nations. In recent years slavery there has taken the form of forced labor and "vile penance."

Inventor Tells London Audience Vertical Flying Is No Longer A Fictitious Dream, But A Reality

Vertical flying is no longer a dream, but a reality. Such, at least, was the contention of Senor Juan de la Cerva, the inventor of the autogyro, when he spoke to the Royal Aeronautical Society recently in London. One of his autogyros had succeeded in taking off the ground without a run, he said.

"As a matter of fact," he added, "I succeeded in leaving the ground without a run as far back as 1933, but the usual necessary theories did not allow the system to be sufficiently developed to give absolutely conclusive results until now."

"I have the honor," he then declared, "to make public here for the first time that this result is now achieved. The experimental machine was not intended to give a really good performance in leaving the ground, but was more in the nature of a test bench to improve the principle itself and to perfect the mechanisms used. In spite of this it is perfectly capable of leaving the ground in no wind, with blocks in front of the wheels."

"I want to explain," he added, "that the results obtained are not absolutely conclusive, are still experimental, and prudence forces me to refrain from making any forecast as to how soon they will be obtainable in a practical way."

Further experiments were being conducted, and when they were completed, the autogyro, he felt sure, would be able to jump small houses and trees from a distance of only a few yards. A new experimental machine was being built, incorporating what has already been discovered.

Senor de la Cerva explained the methods he used. The autogyro, he said, still retained its same characteristics, but was not covered into a helicopter. That is to say, the rotor, or windmill, is not engine-driven while the machine is in flight. The rotor has a system of variable pitch blades, and with the blades set at zero pitch on the ground the engine raises the rotor up to high speed. The engine is then disengaged and the pitch of the blades increased to normal and the machine spins itself into the air. Ordinarily forward flying is then started by the ordinary engine and air-curve.

Senor de la Cerva explained that the manoeuvre of taking off vertically was a very simple one from the pilot's point of view, easier and more pleasant than the ordinary take-off. "The most important improvement," he concluded, "will make roof landing a perfectly easy manoeuvre, and I can say we are ready to study any form of application involving flying from small platforms or reduced enclosed spaces."

Battle Against Flu Germ

New Field Of Action Is Found In Alaska

Medical science's battle against the "flu" germ, source of the epidemic the world over, has found a new field of action at Point Barrow, Alaska—where a sudden scourge has claimed several lives.

Noting the "importance" of any epidemic, two Philadelphia physicians, Dr. Horace Pettit and Dr. Margaret Pepper, left Newark, N.J., by plane in a dash to the ice-bound Arctic coast.

The epidemic offers an unusual opportunity to gain valuable new information for that long-sought "flu" germ, which has caused epidemics among natives, unaccustomed to civilization's ways, are always apt to be particularly virulent. All but one of the Point Barrow dead were natives.

Questions For Drivers

Do you give all your attention to your car when you are driving?

Do you always drive at a reasonable speed, giving due consideration to traffic, road and weather conditions?

Do you always give the right of way to pedestrians, especially children and older people?

Do you always keep your car in perfect mechanical condition?

Do you "cut in" when passing another car on the highway?

Do you strictly observe all traffic rules, stop lights and signals?

Hopper Plague

Scientists Believe Trouble From This Pest Is Nearing End

With fears concerning drought and soil drifting away for the present, science now mases its forces to lay low an unscrupulous enemy of the farmer—the grasshopper. Success was predicted as the weatherman alerted himself to the fight.

Entomologists believe the five-year reign of the king of farm pests is at an end. The "hopper plague" started in 1929 and each succeeding year brought new infestations. In 1933 billions of them appeared. Standing crops virtually disappeared overnight.

An organized campaign will be waged, even more intense, if necessary, than that year when approximately $750,000 was set apart by the federal government. A serious outbreak, however, is anticipated only at 38 points compared to 160 at this date last year.

Strip harnes and other methods of cultivation have played their part in controlling the invasion. Farm committees have been formed and three private provinces will work as one unit in dispersing poison bait. Trucks will rush the mixture to the threatened sections at the first signs of infestation and officials believe the protective efforts will speed down to the winged hordes will appear in a few years.

Reason Drought Is Over

Polar Air Currents Spread Farther South This Year

Why rain should fall by half this spring in the central states, balked last year by the worst drought in history, puzzles even the experts.

According to W. P. Day, government forecaster at Chicago, a lucky collision of air currents over Canada has changed the picture. May, without much warning, suddenly replaced the Mississippi rain so high that in some towns boats have been known to be panned casually so as not to spill water over the levees.

"The immediate cause," said Day, is that the polar air currents and the tropical air current met this year further south. Last year they were as far north that the precipitation that resulted never reached the middle west.

Father's Fund Is Growing

Letters to the hundred with annual subscriptions to the King's Royal Jubilee Memorial Fund are being received by the Prince of Wales, sponsor of the fund, at St. James' palace. The fund is to be devoted to children's welfare. "Because I wished to give pleasure to my children, so I send it to you," said one earnest contributor.

Swimming Lessons For Police

Toronto police recruits will have swimming lessons as part of their regular training. The decision was decided upon following the drowning of P. C. Mack when the police car he was driving crashed into the bay. Lessons will be compulsory.

Meat Prices Are Firm

Demand For Lamb Is Likely To Be Increased

As a result of drought conditions in the United States there is now a real shortage of beef and pork. The rapid diminution of supplies of cattle and hogs at all leading United States stock yards indicates that our good neighbors in the south will be forced to readjust their meat eating to include a larger proportion of lamb.

In Canada the situation is likely to follow along somewhat similar lines. Already as a result of the rapid rise in the price of beef from Canada and the firm condition of the hog market due to heavy exports of bacon to Great Britain and lower hog deliveries as compared with a year ago, the position in regard to the consumption of lamb is becoming increasingly favorable.

Lamb in both Canada and the United States is, at the moment, a bargain counter meat. In the United States sheep flocks have without drought conditions much better than last year. In Canada, as a result of a definite and constructive sheep policy, lamb in Canada has been greatly improved and is available in the year round as fresh, succulent, as great-fat lamb or as available feeded lamb.

Training That Is Valuable

Young People Being Taught To Be Better People

In drama and oratory it appears to us that the youth of to-day are preparing to excel the older generation greatly. The teaching or oral composition in the high schools has been a worthwhile innovation the past few years. Dramatic scenes in schools and in communities are also teaching the young folk expression and skill in handling themselves in public.

The SNAPSHOT

Make the Camera Your Traveling Companion

Let your camera be your favorite traveling companion. Your vacation and travel snapshots will serve admirably in illustrating letters you write later to relatives and friends.

A member of the Snapshot Guild returned recently from a rather long journey after a rather relatively many cities. "I had a lovely time visiting and enjoyed the traveling," she wrote, "but one thing I don't like to say of my trip, I did not take along my camera. No, I didn't forget it. I simply didn't take it and thought no more about it until I reached my sister's home. Then I discovered something. I have been reading the Snapshot Guild. I have taken quite a number of good pictures by following instructions, but didn't realize that I had unconsciously developed an eye for pictures," she continued.

"When I arrived at my sister's home I found a number of snapshots of various scenes. I was a little old and here she was toddling around and getting into all sorts of mischief. I could easily have taken pictures of all sorts of things, but I didn't. I only took pictures of the younger folks' kind of interesting things."

With the coming of warmer weather and more sunshine we are reaching that time of year when the sun is shining bright and the clouds are clearing. It is a glorious time of the year.

As the sun becomes brighter and the sky clearer, remember that more and better light will be entering your camera and reaching your film. Your exposure should be somewhat shorter than in the winter.

Suppose for instance, that on a day in February you took several pictures of a subject and the light was in the front yard. If you had a folding camera and the day was of average brightness (with sunlight) for that date, you probably set the lens at 1/25 of a second. If you opened at 1/25 of a second, and got a picture exposed negative. Again suppose you are taking such a picture today. Then what? If the sun is shining brightly and the day is clear, instead of having the diaphragm set at 1/25 and the shutter speed at 1/50 of a second as you did in February, you should do one of two things.

If you leave your lens opening at f/8, your shutter speed should be set at 1/50 of a second. Or, you may set the diaphragm at f/11 and probably stop at the proper exposure under average sunlight conditions with the shutter speed of 1/50 of a second. Presumably I recommend the smaller aperture, or lens opening, and the longer shutter speed for the smaller diaphragm opening the greater the length of time the sun is shining the brighter days. At home and traveling have your camera ready for instant use.

Egg Grading Regulations

Co-ordination of Federal And Provincial Facilities In Respect To Manitoia

Co-ordination of Dominion and provincial facilities in the more effective application of egg-grading regulations in Manitoba has been agreed upon following recent conversations between Hon. Robert Weir, Dominion minister of agriculture, and Hon. D. G. McNamee, provincial minister. It was stated, however, that the two ministers declared themselves emphatically in support of grading and the carrying of the higher grade return back to the producer.

A statement issued from the department of agriculture said:

"The province, as indicated in its recent activities in this direction, is systematically following up the principle of licensing egg-handlers. It is intended that bonding requirements will shortly be included as well."

"The Dominion Department, through its inspection service, will continue on securing accurate and efficient grading, and the uniform application of grading through all channels of trade."

Zones For Seed Production

Act Passed By B.C. Legislature Will Protect Growers

Zoning for seed production was the purpose of one of the acts passed by the British Columbia Legislature this year. Under this act any community interested in seed production may be protected from cross pollution and such like dangers. This is known as the Seed Growers Protection Act. It was devised to facilitate the growing of pure seed of vegetable and field crops. Upon application for such a seed zone, the Governor in Council may appoint a committee who will have complete control over the crops grown in that area. The penalty for non-compliance of the committee's rulings is a fine of $100. Only one variety is allowed to be grown in one community, so that for instance, a man who is growing one variety of onions for seed will not have his crop ruined by cross pollination from other varieties. All will grow the same variety.

The petition from such a zone must be signed by at least sixty per cent. of the land owners in the proposed seed area, which eliminates the holders from continuing the situation. The personnel of the committee may be recommended by the applicants, and the minister appoints one member. This committee has the power to carry out and enforce the provisions of the act, to employ and supervise such employees as are necessary, to pay the wages of such employees. Funds for this work are provided by the land owners in the zone, who are assessed according to requirements.

Invents Automatic Train

Russian Thinks It Will Make 450 Miles In Four Hours

Having a speed of over 100 miles an hour, an automatic train has been invented by O. Polin, who is exhibiting a model in the Institute of Transport Inventors in Moscow, Russia. He expects to see his invention make the trip from Moscow to Leningrad in four hours. The train will have a diesel motor of 300 horsepower and special stabilizers to eliminate all possibility of derailment. It will have three coaches for 236 passengers.

A Treasured Souvenir

Naval Officer Has Golden Jubilee Gift From Queen Victoria

While the emperors celebrate the King's silver jubilee, Harry Davis, of Victoria, B.C., regards with pride a tiny brass beer jug made at the command of Queen Victoria for her golden jubilee in 1867.

The souvenir was one of a limited number presented by the queen to officers of the royal navy. The model has long since been destroyed. Figures in white on the side of the jug depict Queen Victoria on her throne and the many sections of the British Empire.

Leads In Hog Production

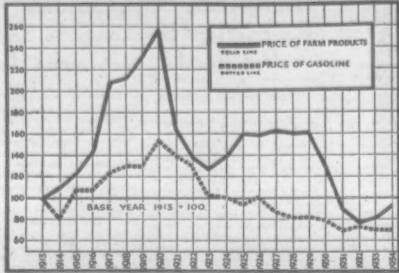

Alberta Takes First Place Among Canadian Provinces

Holding hog production volume leads for the past three years and greatly improving the quality, Alberta has taken first place among the Canadian provinces for the first time. The province's hog production for the first three months of 1934 was 1,100,000 head, compared with 1,000,000 head for the first three months of 1933.

Reports New Disease

A new disease called a twin of diabetes, which shows itself in excessive hunger, was reported by the American College of Physicians at Philadelphia. Diabetes is due to the body's inability to handle sugar. The twin is said to be opposite the body demands excessive sugar. Steele Harris, M.D., professor emeritus of the University of California, is the author of the report.

The depressed price of farm products is a problem with which everyone is familiar, but on the 1915 basis farm product prices have never been as low as gasoline. Between 1913 and 1920 gasoline did not rise in price to nearly the same extent as farm products, yet since 1920 its price has almost continuously declined. The data for the above graph are based on figures published by the Dominion Bureau of Statistics.

A DYING WAGE

WHEN we started business in 1880 our first rule was to pay a fair living wage.

In 1919 we decided a living wage was not enough. We should pay a dying wage, too. We knew how hard it is for the worker to make provision for his old age and for his dependents in the event of his death.

So we introduced benefits and pensions plans. Sickness benefits—the incapacitated employee to continue drawing pay according to his term of service; pensions—a fair living allowance for the worker who reaches old age; death benefits—a cheque immediately for the deceased worker's family. These things lifted a burden of care from our employees' shoulders—made them happier, more enterprising and more efficient. They lifted a burden from the shoulders of the Canadian taxpayer, too.

We are proud of these plans which have helped so much to build up a loyal organization of thousands of Canadian workers. Their devotion to their work has made it possible for us to serve Canada with quality products at lower and lower prices.

SAVE

WE've heard a lot of that word "save" in the past few years. For some time now the question of saving our pennies and dimes has not only been important—but imperative.

Also, it may be noted that everyone who is in the business of selling merchandise to the public has devoted his attention to pointing out how much you, the customer, can SAVE by dealing with him, to the exclusion of others. Which is perfectly all right, too. In his way, except that it is inadvisable for a customer in his own interests to be sure that the savings that he is getting are real and not simply over-enthusiasm on the advertiser's part. In other words to save where it's SAFE to save—to save, for instance at EATON'S, where values means not simply bargains—but quality at a price—and where every claim regarding merchandise is backed by a iron-clad guarantee of satisfaction that makes every purchase doubly safe. It's natural to want to save—but it's wise to remember that "IT'S SAFE to save at EATON'S."

"Well, hardly," agreed Dad. "It's that all, Louise?"

"Very nearly," she says. "Let me know what time Nancy will arrive at Colorado Springs, and I will send some trusty person to meet her by an automobile, as Pine Ridge is on a branch road and our only train leaves early in the morning. If one greets her on arrival, I'll be there, please, to sit quietly in the station until called for."

A girlish chuckle escaped Aunt Judy.

"You can check yourself in the parrel room, Nancy. Proceed, Louise. I beg pardon for interrupting."

Jack winked at one aunt as the other retorted: "But there's not children. Judith, but there's not much more, she says. I feel sure that this experience will improve your daughter." Here's that, James!

Field Dad, with spirit: "Why on earth should she imagine that our Nancy needs improving?"

"And how would she get it in a little one-hour western town?" asked Mother.

"This way," smiled Aunt Louise, reverting to the subject: "She would get away from the narrow New England viewpoint. She would learn something about the vastness of our country."

"I suppose she means those 'great open spaces' we read about," laughed Jack, while his aunt, ignoring him, continued:

"The milder climate would improve her health, and she would experience the satisfaction of being self-supporting. Please write at once, and believe me, dear James, your affectionate though unseen cousin, Columbus Nelson."

Aunt Louise looked up. "Well," she declared, drawing a deep breath, "I call that the 'very limit'!"

For this meticulous teacher of English to use an expression so readily approaching slang, was an event in her family; and, as Nancy retorted: "This plain, Aunt Ned, that this is an occasion when Webster's Unabridged is totally inadequate! Dad, dear, how can this reasonable lady be your first cousin?"

And did she acquire her outlandish names because Columbus are the state fables of Colorado?"

"Better look up your history, my dear," replied her father, "Cousin Columbus must be over seventy and Colorado didn't become a state until 1876. I'll admit that I probably remember the date because it's also the year that I was born," he added humbly.

"But how," asked Jack, "did an uncle of yours land way off in the 'Wild West, Dad?'"

"You've heard the story numberless times, son."

"Not for a long while, and I never gave it any special thought. I'm a queer for one lone member of a family to start off on his wilderness."

James Nelson glanced at his sister, and she said: "As I recall the story, Father's half-brother, Zethu

Nelson, who was a good bit better than the others, possessed the most derelict. He yearned to see something besides his native New Hampshire, and as his young wife was first with the same ambition, they started West in a covered wagon, drawn by one unless my memory's at fault."

"Alone!" questioned the boy, leaning forward eagerly.

"Oh, not they were three other wagons in the caravan, or whatever they called it. Part of those pioneers turned back somewhere in Kansas, frightened. I believe, by the immensity of the prairie. Others pushed on to California; but it was rumors of gold in the Colorado mountains that lured Jed on that direction, and, unlooked-for circumstances which made him stop where he did. Of course it wasn't Pine Ridge then, but just uncharted wilderness. But the journey had proved too hard on his wife, and instead of reaching some settlement, Denver or possibly Omaha (which was flourishing because of the gold rush) for the event, her baby was born in a covered wagon at the spot which was later to be called Pine Ridge."

"And that baby was Cousin Columbus?"

"Here's where her name comes in, daughter. Early next morning Jed discovered some enormous blue and white combs growing nearby, and carried the wherry of the new mother. The story goes that she uttered an exclamation of surprise at their beauty, and cried out: 'Columbus! I know now what we'll call our little daughter!'"

"Do you suppose," asked Jack, "if he'd presented the lady with a cat's paw, she'd have named her baby 'Cattanooga'?"

"Goodness gracious, boy, have you no sense?" approved Aunt Judy.

"And the fact that you've been studying botany cries aloud. Excuse me! I never heard the word before."

"Nor I," admitted Mother. "That do you mean to say, Jim, that a man can be so stupid as to wander out constant to stay right where Fate landed him for the rest of his natural life?"

"Indeed no," spoke up Aunt Louise, "and in my opinion Uncle Zethu's poor wife had a long time of it. He was a poor fellow, but a wanderer was constant to stay right where Fate landed him for the rest of his natural life."

And even if I got some sort of job it probably wouldn't much more than pay my car-fares and lunches for a year or two. And there's you—simply a parlor ornament and—"

"Thanks," broke in his sister coldly, "sliding down under the puff again."

"You don't need to rub it in, just now, do you?"

"I don't intend to rub in anything; but there's no need of talking about the truth, either. I suppose you could help Mother 'round the house some, but with Aunt Judy gone, and Aunt Lou home only Sunday, there won't be an awful lot to do. And I've a notion that I rather keep busy anyway, so I won't think about things. I suppose she's just about heart-broken over you."

Nancy said nothing for a moment; then "Do you think it will add to her happiness if I'm two thousand miles away, all alone, living with a queer old woman and her two sons, and dying of homesickness?"

"No," said Jack, "I think she'd worry herself sick. But if you weren't alone, Nancy—if I went too."

"You?" interrupted the girl, amazedly. "Why, how do you know that?"

"Cousin Columbus would take you in?"

Jack hitched an inch or two nearer, his eyes bright with interest. "I don't expect her to; but she could get a job on an outfit like mine. I've always been crazy to see the West; and with us both away earning our own living, things would be easier for Dad and Mother."

"But you said yourself, Jack, that what Cousin Columbus wanted was a salary."

"Oh, forget it. I was just talking. If she's a woman come to every day the work can't kill you; and her suit must come with her. He wouldn't even have to feed us!"

"Is my appetite as fearful a thing as that? Why you talk as if we'd have to apply to the Division of Agriculture for Christmas dinner! Dad can't be so hard up that we'll have to worry about food, Jack."

"But it costs less to support three than five, my dear. You can't get away from that. If you say the word I'll come in an instant. We'll need Cousin Columbus to-morrow. I'll explain what's happened, and ask him to get a job out there. He'll be glad to go. Mother will hear from him. I'll ask her to telegraph."

Nancy looked at the boy curiously, and then she said: "I'm a stranger here. I'm just seventeen and his sister had always regarded him with the tolerance one might expect to give a younger brother. Now, suddenly, he seemed older than herself, for at the first hint of trouble he had put his arm round her, and she knew that Nancy felt a bit ashamed of herself; for she knew that it was not Jack's fault, but the whole thing was caused by him to make this plan, but a genuine desire to help his father."

"Well," he questioned with impatience. "The girl drew in a quivering breath."

"Do-do you think we must, Jack? I'll admit that the idea—terrible—"

"Oh, be your age, Nancy! We're not going into dark Africa."

"I know; but it's as awfully far away. Suppose we get sick—bad appendicitis or something."

Jack laughed softly.

"The only way you'd get appendicitis is by eating too much. We never have been sick—either of us—so why worry? I don't say it'll be all fun by any means, but I know you'd get something about the country, as the old lady said; and it's not a life sentence. You'd be home in two weeks, and his business straightened out. We'd be a sport, Sis, and let me write the letter."

"Without asking Dad—or Mother?"

He nodded.

"There'll be time enough to talk it over when we hear from Cousin Columbus. Like as not she'll want the whole scheme; but even if they won't consent after we've made our plans, Nancy, no harm will be done."

"Well," agreed Nancy with sudden resolution, "go on and write."

"That's the stuff!"

Jack said his long legs off the bed and proceeded, as noiselessly as possible to open the window again.

"Right, Jack, I know, you'd sense after I showed it to you. And you don't dare let us go on to anything but 'Just how much.'"

It was not so hard to "sleep" Nancy as expected. The next few days were strenuous ones, and the other members of the family, and the Jack, who did not return to Exeter on Monday, spent two of those days driving his mother and Aunt Judy to Eldorado in his beloved "Mary Ann," so they could look into conditions at the old home and decide what furniture must be sent out from the city.
